Supply Chain Career Awareness

The Center of Excellence for Global Trade & Supply Chain management is working with iUrban Teen to create a supply chain career awareness program in early August.

A group of high school students from underserved populations will come to Highline's campus August 3 - 5 to learn more about careers in supply chain, including from speakers who work in the industry and come from similar backgrounds as the high schoolers.

The students will get to visit the airport and get a tour of the air cargo operations.

WHAT'S YOUR INTRO TO SUPPLY CHAIN

I first got introduced to the supply chain industry while working in the furniture industry. My role as an Interior Design Consultant involved designing the layout of customer homes and creating purchase orders with different suppliers we bought our pieces from. Furniture purchased from suppliers overseas could take months to arrive in the states. After meeting suppliers' reps and learning the purchasing side of the industry, I realized I wanted to add value to consumers in a manner that wasn't as visible.

Why Supply chain?

I'd say the network of people you come into contact with is incredible! I can remember meeting people in casual settings unrelated to supply chain. But later, our paths crossing on a project requiring our collaboration. As a supply chain professional, it's remarkable the amount of career mobility that we have. In my short time as a student, I have been exposed to several industries that all seek our expertise.
